5. RESEARCH

Over the last decade I have developed four particular areas of research expertise, which are now reflected in the research terrain of the Centre for Work + Life at the University of South Australia.

Work and Life

This research has involved extensive analysis of ABS data and collection and analysis of new qualitative data about work and its complex intersections with households, families and social life. This work has resulted in many publications and extensive involvement in public policy development, expert witness testimony, media analysis and commentary, and public speaking on a regular basis, both nationally in each Australian state and internationally. Most of this publication, policy, media and speaking is on an invited basis. Books include The Work/Life Collision (2003) and The Labour Market Ate My Babies: Work, Children and a Sustainable Future (2006). My current Fellowship is titled Work/life in Australia: The changing work and life patterns and preferences of Australian workers, communities and households. This project is undertaking new research on work/family/life issues in Australia. I am examining changing patterns of work (broadly defined) in Australia, and the dynamic relationship of these changes with the nature of Australian communities, workplaces and families. In 2005 I have developed a new line of analysis in collaboration with a large multinational developer with a view to expanding this analysis to a range of Australian communities across a range of income groups.

Industrial Relations

I have examined the nature of industrial relations changes in Australia with a particular focus upon inequality and their gendered character. Several larger research projects have enabled this work. I have published many times on these issues and addressed national forums, Senate Committees of Inquiry, given expert testimony, and presented at many conferences in relation to research and analysis of the impact of actual and proposed change. My academic work has been supplemented by direct experience as a policy advisor to politicians, and I have overseen the drafting of legislation, and participated in many forms of parliamentary activity.

Gender and work

I have taken a broad definition of 'work' and undertaken detailed analysis of workplace change internationally and in Australia, including in my analysis both the paid and unpaid spheres. I have closely examined the nature and effect of union interventions in the labour market with detailed analysis of their gendered politics.

Unionism

I have been researching unions in Australia since 1990. My work has been widely used by leaders in Australian unions, university teachers and students. My 1998 study of US unions (leading to the monograph Organising Our Future (co-authored with John Wishart) resulted in an extended national round of public speaking at industry and academic conferences. It has also been widely circulated amongst union educators in the US, and has been distributed to union leadership course participants at the Harvard Trade Union Education program. I have published widely in relation to unionism, and have undertaken two ARC grants along with several consultancies in relation to unionism. I have conducted national management reviews for specific unions. I supervise Phd students in the above areas of research. I have been awarded seven ARC research projects since 1997 since the award of my Phd (3 Discoveries and 4 Linkages). Currently I hold a Discovery grant and three Linkage grants and have undertaken many consultancies. I regularly convene teams of researchers.

6. TEACHING

I have devised, coordinated, lectured, tutored, designed assessment and assessed work in courses within the B. Arts, B. Arts (Labour Studies), B. Labour Studies and Bachelor of Economics. I have also taught and supervised at Honours, Graduate Diploma, Masters and Phd levels.

8. COMMUNITY AND SERVICE CONTRIBUTIONS

I regularly speak at state, national and international conferences. I have been a member of the principle advisory mechanisms to both the state and federal governments in Australia in the areas of women's employment and training. I endeavour to ensure that my academic research reaches a wide audience and influences public events. In addition to public speaking and media work, I have been an active participant in a wide variety of government, community and private organisations throughout my working life.
